NMU Computer Science professor Andy Poe and Computer Science major Josh Fodale will discuss programming contests at NMU. Dr. Poe will discuss the rules, format, and history of the competition while Mr. Fodale will discuss the experience from a student's perspective.

Don't forget that the 6th Annual Programming Contest is coming up in March. This talk is a great opportunity for anyone who is curious about programming contests to learn all about them.

Not a Computer Science major? No problem - you can learn how to participate in these events without even competing!

There will be refreshments and plenty of opportunity for questions and answers.
